THE CODE OF LAWS OF THE TREDT UNION

TITLE I — GENERAL PROVISIONS

An Act to establish the general provisions, construction, interpretation, publication, citation, and legal authority of the TREDT Union Codex pursuant to Article 93 of the Constitution of TREDT.

Be it enacted by Parliament of the TREDT Union on this 22nd day of May 2026.

§ 1. Establishment of the TREDT Union Codex

(a) Pursuant to Article 93 of the Constitution of TREDT, there is hereby established a body of statutory laws to be known as the TREDT Union Codex.

(b) The TREDT Union Codex shall constitute the official codification of the laws enacted by Parliament concerning criminal law, trade law, electoral law, and such additional matters as may be provided by law.

(c) The TREDT Union Codex is enacted as positive law and shall possess the full force and effect of law throughout the TREDT Union.

§ 2. Constitutional Recognition

(a) The Constitution of TREDT recognizes the TREDT Union Codex as the official statutory authority governing matters assigned to it by Article 93.

(b) Whenever the Constitution refers a matter relating to crimes, trade, elections, investigations, prosecutions, trials, judgments, penalties, enforcement, or execution of judgments, such matter shall be governed by the applicable provisions of the TREDT Union Codex.

(c) All courts, tribunals, public bodies, executive agencies, election authorities, and persons shall act in accordance with the applicable provisions of the TREDT Union Codex.

§ 3. Composition of the Codex

The TREDT Union Codex shall consist of the following Titles:

Title 1 – General Provisions;

Title 2 – Union Criminal Codex (UCC);

Title 3 – Union Electoral Codex (UEC); and

Title 4 – TREDT Trading Codex (UTC);

§ 4. Legal Force

- (a) The provisions of the TREDT Union Codex shall be binding throughout the TREDT Union.
- (b) All criminal, electoral, and trade proceedings shall be governed by the TREDT Union Codex unless otherwise provided by the Constitution.
- (c) No court or authority shall disregard a provision of the Codex except where such provision has been declared unconstitutional by a court of competent jurisdiction.

§ 5. Citation

- (a) The TREDT Union Codex may be cited as "T.U.C."
- (b) Citations shall be made in the following form:

T.U.C. Title II § 101 - 221

T.U.C. Title III § 222 - 342

T.U.C. Title IV § 343 - 473

- (c) Citations made in accordance with this section shall be recognized by all courts and authorities of the TREDT Union.

§ 6. Authority of Parliament

Parliament shall possess the exclusive authority to enact, amend, repeal, revise, codify, consolidate, and regulate the provisions of the TREDT Union Codex in accordance with Article 93 of the Constitution.

§ 7. Additional Titles

Parliament may establish additional Titles, Books, Chapters, Parts, Subchapters, Sections, and Codes within the TREDT Union Codex as may be necessary for the peace, order, and good governance of the TREDT Union.

§ 8. Constitutional Supremacy

- (a) The Constitution of TREDT shall remain the supreme law of the TREDT Union.
- (b) No provision of the TREDT Union Codex shall be valid to the extent of its inconsistency with the Constitution.

(c) In every case of conflict between the Constitution and the Codex, the Constitution shall prevail.

§ 9. Judicial Notice

The Imperial Court of Justice of TREDT, all State High Courts, and all subordinate courts and tribunals shall take judicial notice of the TREDT Union Codex without necessity of formal proof.

§ 10. Official Publication

The TREDT Union Codex shall be officially published under authority of Parliament and shall constitute prima facie evidence of the laws of the TREDT Union.

TITLE II — UNION CRIMINAL CODEX

An Act to prescribe offenses, criminal liability, punishments, and the procedures of investigation, prosecution, trial, sentencing, and execution of criminal judgments throughout the TREDT Union, pursuant to Article 93 of the Constitution of TREDT.

Be it enacted by Parliament of the TREDT Union on this ____ day of __, 20.

CHAPTER 1 — GENERAL PROVISIONS

§ 101. Short title.

This Title may be cited as the Union Criminal Codex. In legal proceedings, formal instruments, judicial opinions, and administrative records, this citation shall identify the criminal law authority of the TREDT Union within the broader TREDT Union Codex.

§ 102. Purpose.

The purpose of this Title is to define offenses, establish criminal responsibility, and prescribe lawful procedures for investigation, prosecution, adjudication, punishment, and execution of criminal judgments. It shall be read as a unified code intended to secure justice, order, and public safety.

§ 103. Scope.

This Codex applies to all criminal acts and omissions within the lawful jurisdiction of the TREDT Union. It governs individuals, public officers, and legal persons to the extent recognized by law, and it applies unless a contrary constitutional provision expressly controls.

§ 104. Territorial application.

The provisions of this Title apply throughout the territory and jurisdiction of the TREDT Union, including all places, settlements, institutions, and recognized public spaces subject to Union authority. No person may claim exemption from this Title merely by location, status, or office.

§ 105. Persons subject to this Codex.

All persons within Union jurisdiction are subject to this Codex, including citizens, residents, visitors, public officers, contractors, and entities recognized by law. Liability may arise where an offense is committed personally, through another, or through organized conduct attributable to the accused.

§ 106. Interpretation.

This Codex shall be interpreted in harmony with the Constitution of TREDT, Title I of the TREDT Union Codex, and the ordinary meaning of its terms. Where the language is clear, it shall be applied as written; where ambiguity exists, the interpretation that best serves justice shall prevail.

§ 107. Supremacy.

No provision of this Codex shall operate inconsistently with the Constitution. If any section of this Title is found incompatible with constitutional text, the constitutional text shall control and the inconsistent provision shall be read down, limited, or held invalid to the extent necessary.

§ 108. Construction of criminal laws.

Criminal laws in this Title shall be construed narrowly where punishment is involved and broadly enough to carry out their protective purpose. A court shall avoid interpretations that create absurdity, unfairness, or arbitrary enforcement, and shall favor lawful certainty in every criminal proceeding.

§ 109. Minimum legality.

No act or omission may be punished unless it has been declared an offense by law before the conduct occurred. Criminal liability shall not be imposed by custom alone, private command, or retrospective invention. The law must clearly state the prohibited conduct and the authorized sanction.

§ 110. Fair trial principle.

All criminal proceedings shall respect due process, fairness, notice, and the opportunity to be heard. The accused shall be allowed to contest the evidence, challenge unlawful procedure, and present lawful defences. No sentence may be imposed through secret or arbitrary process.

CHAPTER 2 — OFFENSES, LIABILITY, AND PARTICIPATION

§ 111. Offense defined.

An offense is any act or omission declared punishable by this Codex or by another law validly incorporated into it. The offense may be complete upon the prohibited conduct alone, or it may require resulting harm, completed impact, or specific intent depending on the wording of the provision.

§ 112. Act and omission.

Liability may arise from an unlawful act or from a legally punishable failure to act. An omission is punishable where the law imposes a duty to act, where the person voluntarily assumed responsibility, or where the person created the danger and failed to prevent the harm.

§ 113. Intent.

Where intent is required, the prosecution must prove the accused acted purposefully or knowingly with respect to the prohibited result or conduct. Intent may be inferred from statements, planning, repeated behavior, concealment, or other lawful evidence showing deliberate choice rather than accident.

§ 114. Knowledge.

Knowledge exists where a person is aware of the facts that make conduct unlawful or aware of a strong likelihood that the facts exist. The law may infer knowledge from direct admissions, circumstantial evidence, or conduct showing conscious awareness and deliberate continuation.

§ 115. Recklessness.

A person acts recklessly when aware of a substantial and unjustifiable risk and yet proceeds in conscious disregard of that risk. Recklessness is more serious than negligence because it reflects a deliberate decision to ignore obvious danger or probable harm.

§ 116. Negligence.

A person acts negligently when failing to exercise reasonable care in circumstances where such care is legally required. Negligence may support liability where the law provides for it, especially when a person's careless conduct creates avoidable danger to others, property, or public order.

§ 117. Attempt.

A person who takes a substantial step toward the commission of an offense may be guilty of attempt even if the offense is not completed. Mere preparation alone is insufficient unless the acts clearly show a direct movement toward the forbidden result.

§ 118. Conspiracy.

A conspiracy exists where two or more persons agree to commit an offense and perform an act in furtherance of that agreement where required by law. Each participant may be liable for the agreement itself and for foreseeable acts done in execution of the unlawful design.

§ 119. Solicitation.

Solicitation occurs when a person requests, commands, induces, or encourages another to commit an offense. The offense may be punishable even if the person solicited refuses or the crime is not completed, provided the law recognizes solicitation as a separate form of criminal participation.

§ 120. Accomplice liability.

A person who aids, abets, assists, advises, or encourages the commission of an offense may be liable as an accomplice. Liability may attach where the person intentionally helps the principal actor, provides tools or planning, or otherwise contributes materially to the offense.

CHAPTER 3 — OFFENSES AGAINST THE UNION

§ 121. Treason.

Treason includes betrayal of the Union through hostile action, intentional assistance to enemies of the lawful order, or direct conduct designed to undermine the survival, authority, or security of the state. Because of its seriousness, treason shall be charged only on clear and substantial proof.

§ 122. Sedition.

Sedition includes incitement or organized encouragement of violent or unlawful resistance against the Union's lawful authority. It is punishable where speech or conduct goes beyond criticism and becomes a direct call to disorder, rebellion, or the unlawful overthrow of public order.

§ 123. Espionage.

Espionage includes unlawfully obtaining, copying, transferring, or disclosing protected state information for hostile, unauthorized, or improper purposes. The offense is committed whether the information is taken physically, electronically, or through deceptive access to restricted records or state systems.

§ 124. Sabotage.

Sabotage includes knowingly damaging, disrupting, disabling, or interfering with public systems, services, works, structures, or operations. The offense is aggravated where the conduct threatens public safety, national functioning, emergency response, or the stability of institutions protected by Union law.

§ 125. Insurrection.

Insurrection includes organized violent resistance to lawful Union authority, especially where persons assemble, arm, coordinate, or execute conduct intended to seize control, prevent governance, or replace legal authority by force. Mere dissent is not insurrection unless coupled with unlawful force or direct violent intent.

§ 126. Terror-related offenses.

Acts intended to intimidate the public or coerce government action through unlawful violence, destructive threat, or widespread fear may constitute terror-related offenses. The law may punish planning, support, financing, or coordination where the conduct is tied to such prohibited ends.

§ 127. Unlawful assembly against the Union.

Participation in an unlawful assembly becomes punishable when the group is formed to commit violent offenses against the Union, its institutions, or its lawful officers. Peaceful assembly is not affected unless the gathering becomes unlawful by purpose, conduct, or persistent refusal to disperse.

§ 128. Obstructing state security.

Any intentional interference with lawful security operations, protective services, defensive systems, or authorized state enforcement efforts may be punished under this section. The offense includes deception, hindrance, sabotage, concealment, or active interference that materially impairs security performance.

§ 129. Harboring Union offenders.

Knowingly concealing, sheltering, supplying, or assisting a person wanted for a serious offense against the Union is punishable. Liability may arise where the helper knows the person's status and acts to delay arrest, prosecution, custody, or lawful investigation.

§ 130. False allegiance and hostile support.

False allegiance and hostile support include deliberate aid, loyalty, or material assistance given to unlawful hostile actors in a manner that undermines the Union's lawful authority. Liability depends on knowledge, purpose, and the seriousness of the support provided, especially when it strengthens hostile conduct.

CHAPTER 4 — OFFENSES AGAINST PERSONS§ 131. Homicide.

Unlawful killing of a person is homicide. The offense may be classified according to intent, recklessness, provocation, or other lawful distinction. Courts shall distinguish between deliberate killing, reckless killing, and killings committed under legally recognized mitigating circumstances.

§ 132. Murder.

Murder is intentional or especially reckless unlawful killing. The offense is aggravated when committed with planning, cruelty, concealment, or for unlawful gain. A conviction for murder requires proof beyond the lawful standard that the accused caused the death with the required culpability.

§ 133. Manslaughter.

Manslaughter is unlawful killing without the highest degree of culpability required for murder. It may arise from reckless conduct, unlawful provocation, or other circumstances recognized by law. The court may consider the absence of premeditation when determining classification and sentence.

§ 134. Assault.

Assault is the unlawful threat, attempt, or infliction of harmful physical aggression against a person. The offense covers both attempted violence and acts causing immediate fear of unlawful harm. It may be punished even where no lasting injury occurs, if the conduct was deliberate and unlawful.

§ 135. Aggravated assault.

Assault becomes aggravated where serious injury results, where dangerous means are used, where multiple offenders act together, or where the victim is especially vulnerable. The legislature may further enhance punishment when the assault is connected to public officers, custody, or protected institutions.

§ 136. Battery.

Battery is unlawful harmful or offensive physical contact with another person. The contact need not cause permanent injury to be punishable if it is intentional, unauthorized, and offensive to lawful personal security. Repeated conduct may support higher penalties or related charges.

§ 137. Kidnapping.

Kidnapping is the unlawful taking, confinement, movement, or holding of a person by force, threat, deception, or abuse of authority. The offense is aggravated by ransom, prolonged confinement, concealment, or harm to the victim, and may support severe punishment.

§ 138. False imprisonment.

False imprisonment is the unlawful restraint of another person's liberty without lawful authority. It includes locking, blocking, confining, detaining, or otherwise preventing movement. The offense may exist even without physical violence if the restraint is intentional and unauthorized.

§ 139. Threats and intimidation.

Threatening a person to compel conduct, suppress reporting, or cause fear is punishable. The law covers direct threats, implied threats, and repeated intimidating conduct where the purpose or effect is unlawful control over another's behavior, safety, or freedom.

§ 140. Coercion.

Coercion is the use of unlawful pressure, force, threats, or abusive leverage to compel another person to act or refrain from acting. A court may find coercion where consent is overcome by fear or duress rather than genuine choice.

§ 141. Harassment.

Harassment includes repeated unlawful conduct that disturbs, intimidates, humiliates, or targets a person without lawful purpose. The conduct may be physical, verbal, or otherwise persistent, and it may be punished more severely when directed at minors, officers, witnesses, or vulnerable persons.

§ 142. Stalking.

A repeated course of conduct that causes fear, serious distress, or substantial interference with a person's peace may constitute stalking. The focus is on persistence, unwanted attention, and the reasonable fear produced, especially when warnings, boundaries, or protective orders have been ignored.

§ 143. Endangerment of a person.

Knowingly placing another person at serious risk of harm, death, confinement, or deprivation of safety may be punished as endangerment. The offense may stand even if no actual injury occurs, provided the risk was substantial and the conduct was plainly reckless or intentional.

CHAPTER 5 — OFFENSES AGAINST PROPERTY

§ 144. Theft.

Theft is the unlawful taking of another's property with intent to deprive the owner of possession, use, or value. The offense may be committed by direct taking, stealth, deception, or unauthorized retention, depending on the circumstances and the wording of the applicable charge.

§ 145. Grand theft.

Theft becomes grand theft when the value, quantity, importance, or special character of the property exceeds a threshold set by law. The offense may also be aggravated where the property is publicly owned, essential to operations, or taken from a protected place or person.

§ 146. Robbery.

Robbery is theft accomplished by force, threat, intimidation, or immediate fear of harm. The offense combines unlawful taking with direct coercive conduct, and it is treated more seriously than theft alone because the victim's safety and personal security are actively invaded.

§ 147. Burglary.

Burglary is unlawful entry into a protected place with intent to commit an offense inside. The offense may occur whether or not anything is taken, so long as the entry is unauthorized and made with criminal purpose. Forced entry may increase the seriousness of the charge.

§ 148. Larceny.

Larceny is unlawful taking and carrying away of personal property without consent and with intent to deprive. It may be distinguished from robbery by the absence of force or intimidation, though it remains fully punishable as a serious property offense.

§ 149. Fraud.

Fraud is obtaining property, advantage, privilege, or status by deception, misrepresentation, concealment of material fact, or other dishonest means. The offense may involve false documents, false statements, misleading conduct, or schemes designed to induce reliance and wrongful gain.

§ 150. Embezzlement.

Embezzlement is the unlawful conversion of property lawfully entrusted to a person. A person who receives property for a lawful purpose and later uses it for unauthorized benefit may be guilty of embezzlement, especially where trust, employment, or official responsibility is abused.

§ 151. Extortion.

Extortion is obtaining property, money, services, concessions, or action through threats, intimidation, abuse of power, or wrongful pressure. The offense is aggravated where the threats concern injury, exposure, deprivation, or misuse of official authority against the victim.

§ 152. Criminal damage to property.

Intentional unlawful damage, destruction, or impairment of property is punishable under this section. The law applies to private, public, and protected property, and it may impose increased penalties where the damage affects essential services, safety systems, or critical structures.

§ 153. Arson.

Arson is the unlawful burning or destructive use of fire or equivalent destructive means against property. The offense is severe because it threatens life, property, and public safety, and it may be aggravated where the act is committed knowingly in occupied or sensitive locations.

§ 154. Possession of stolen property.

Knowing possession, receipt, concealment, or sale of property obtained through theft or related offense is punishable. The prosecution must show knowledge or willful blindness to the property's unlawful origin, together with possession or control sufficient to support liability.

CHAPTER 6 — OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC ORDER§ 155. Disorderly conduct.

Disorderly conduct includes behavior that substantially disrupts peace, safety, or ordinary public use of lawful spaces. The offense may involve excessive disturbance, reckless interference, or persistent misconduct that causes public inconvenience, alarm, or danger beyond ordinary disagreement or minor annoyance.

§ 156. Riot.

A riot is a violent, destructive, or unlawfully tumultuous disturbance by multiple persons acting together or in concert. The offense requires group conduct and public disorder, not merely the presence of several persons in the same place. Escalation, coordination, and violence support conviction.

§ 157. Unlawful possession of prohibited items.

Possession of items prohibited by law for safety, security, or institutional order may be punished. The offense may apply to weapons, contraband, illegal tools, or other restricted items, depending on the categories created by statute and the surrounding circumstances of possession.

§ 158. Tampering with public systems.

Interference with public systems, public records, infrastructure, or official services is punishable when done unlawfully. The offense includes manipulation, disruption, alteration, or unauthorized access, especially where the conduct delays operations or undermines the integrity of public administration.

§ 159. Escape from lawful custody.

A person who departs, evades, or breaks from lawful custody without authorization commits escape. The offense may be committed by physical flight, deceit, force, or unauthorized removal from detention, transport, or supervision, and it may be punished separately from the original offense.

§ 160. Aiding escape.

Assisting another person to escape lawful custody is punishable if done knowingly and intentionally. The offense includes providing tools, plans, concealment, transport, or diversionary assistance, and it may be aggravated where the detainee is held for a serious offense.

§ 161. Prison breach.

Breaking into, damaging, or unlawfully interfering with detention facilities, secure custody systems, or places of confinement is an offense. The seriousness increases where the conduct is organized, violent, or intended to release detainees, destroy records, or compromise institutional security.

§ 162. Public nuisance.

Public nuisance includes conduct that unreasonably interferes with public rights, access, safety, or ordinary use of shared places or services. The offense may involve persistent obstruction, pollution, dangerous conduct, or repeated disturbance that harms the community beyond a private dispute.

§ 163. Unlawful obstruction.

Blocking lawful movement, access, operations, or services without authorization may be punished as unlawful obstruction. The law aims to protect transportation, administration, emergency response, public passage, and the functioning of institutions from deliberate or reckless interference.

§ 164. Repeated public disturbance.

Repeated disruptive conduct after warning, notice, or lawful instruction may constitute this offense even if each individual incident appears minor. The law targets patterns of persistent disorder, escalation, and refusal to comply with authority where public peace is repeatedly compromised.

CHAPTER 7 — OFFENSES AGAINST JUSTICE AND ADMINISTRATION

§ 165. Bribery.

Bribery includes offering, giving, requesting, receiving, or accepting an unlawful benefit to influence official conduct. The offense threatens public trust and lawful neutrality, and it may apply to public officers, private intermediaries, and any person who knowingly participates in the corrupt exchange.

§ 166. Corruption.

Corruption is the abuse of office, power, influence, or public trust for unlawful personal, factional, or financial gain. The offense may exist even without a traditional bribe if official authority is traded, misused, or manipulated contrary to law and public duty.

§ 167. Abuse of office.

A public officer who uses official authority for unlawful purposes, excessive advantage, retaliation, favoritism, or unauthorized pressure commits abuse of office. The offense protects lawful administration and punishes conduct that turns public power into private control.

§ 168. Obstruction of justice.

Interference with investigation, prosecution, trial, judgment, enforcement, or lawful evidence gathering is punishable as obstruction of justice. The offense includes concealment, threats, false leads, witness interference, destruction of evidence, or deliberate disruption of official legal processes.

§ 169. Perjury.

Perjury is knowingly making a false statement under lawful oath or affirmation about a material matter. The offense requires willfulness and materiality, and it may be punished more severely where the false statement affects criminal proceedings, public trust, or judicial outcomes.

§ 170. False statement.

Knowingly making a material false statement to an authority, tribunal, or official body is punishable where the law so provides. This section covers deceptive statements outside sworn testimony when the falsehood is intended to mislead lawful decision-making.

§ 171. Destruction of evidence.

Destroying, hiding, altering, or tampering with evidence in anticipation of or during a criminal matter is an offense. The law protects the integrity of truth-finding and may punish conduct even when the evidence is not ultimately used or the original case is not completed.

§ 172. Contemptuous interference.

Willful disobedience of lawful judicial orders, disruptive court conduct, or persistent contemptuous interference may be punished under this section. The purpose is to preserve the authority of the court, the dignity of proceedings, and the orderly administration of justice.

§ 173. Misuse of official records.

Unauthorized alteration, release, suppression, copying, or misuse of protected official records is punishable. The offense applies to paper, digital, and archival records and may be aggravated where the records concern identity, prosecution, elections, public finance, or legal status.

§ 174. Impersonation of authority.

Pretending to be a public officer, authorized agent, or official representative with intent to deceive or obtain advantage is an offense. The law protects public confidence in lawful authority and punishes acts that exploit the appearance of office without legal right.

CHAPTER 8 — INVESTIGATION AND ARREST§ 175. Lawful investigation.

Criminal investigations shall be conducted only by authorized persons and only in accordance with law. Investigators must remain within legal boundaries, and evidence gathered through unauthorized methods may be excluded, limited, or otherwise treated according to the rules of procedure.

§ 176. Complaint initiation.

A criminal case may begin by complaint, report, warrant application, lawful referral, or other authorized initiation method. The complaint should identify the accused conduct with sufficient clarity to permit review, protect against arbitrary action, and allow the accused to understand the basis of the charge.

§ 177. Arrest authority.

Arrest may be made only under lawful authority, whether by warrant, fresh pursuit, or another legal basis recognized by statute. Unauthorized arrest is unlawful, and any officer or person acting outside authority may be subject to criminal, civil, or disciplinary consequences.

§ 178. Warrant requirement.

Where required by law, an arrest or search warrant must be obtained before the action is taken. The warrant shall be issued by a competent authority upon a lawful showing of cause, and it shall identify the place, person, or object with adequate precision.

§ 179. Arrest procedure.

A person arrested shall be informed of the lawful basis for the arrest and processed according to law. The procedure should minimize unnecessary force, protect dignity, and ensure recordkeeping so that later review can confirm the legality of the arrest and custody.

§ 180. Search and seizure.

Searches and seizures shall be conducted according to law and only to the extent necessary for lawful investigation or safety. The law favors specificity, proportionality, and accountability, and it discourages broad or indiscriminate intrusion into protected places, things, or records.

§ 181. Seizure of instruments of crime.

Items used in or derived from an offense may be lawfully seized if authorized by law and properly documented. The purpose is to preserve evidence, prevent further harm, and ensure that tools of unlawful conduct are not retained for additional criminal use.

§ 182. Custody and booking.

An arrested person shall be processed through lawful custody and booking procedures. Recordkeeping should identify the person, the reason for custody, relevant property, and the responsible authority, ensuring transparency and preventing confusion, abuse, or unlawful disappearance.

§ 183. Notification of rights.

A person in custody shall be informed of rights required by law, including the right to silence where recognized, the right to fair treatment, and the right to challenge unlawful detention. Notification must be timely and understandable, not merely ceremonial.

§ 184. Detention review.

Detention shall be subject to timely review by lawful authority to determine whether continued custody is justified. Review protects against arbitrary confinement and ensures that detention remains connected to a valid legal basis, public safety need, or pending judicial process.

§ 185. Bail and release.

Release pending trial may be granted where authorized by law and where the court finds the conditions appropriate. The court may consider flight risk, danger to the public, seriousness of the offense, prior conduct, and compliance history when deciding release terms.

§ 186. Pretrial protection orders.

A court may issue protective orders where necessary to prevent intimidation, retaliation, witness interference, or further harm. Such orders may limit contact, access, movement, or communication and should be tailored to the specific danger identified in the case.

§ 187. Transfer of custody.

Transfer between authorities shall be made only under lawful record and controlled procedure. The receiving authority must confirm custody, preserve continuity of responsibility, and ensure that the person's rights and safety are maintained during transport or handover.

§ 188. Failure to appear.

Willful failure to appear after lawful notice is punishable when a person is required to attend court, investigation, or custody review. The offense protects the authority of the justice system and helps ensure that proceedings are not defeated by deliberate absence.

CHAPTER 9 — TRIAL, EVIDENCE, AND PROCEDURE

§ 189. Criminal jurisdiction.

Courts of competent jurisdiction shall hear criminal cases under this Codex. Jurisdiction depends on the offense, the location, the status of the accused where relevant, and any special assignment made by law, so that each case is heard by the proper authority.

§ 190. Charging instrument.

A prosecution shall begin by indictment, information, or lawful charge under the procedure established by law. The charging instrument must state the offense clearly enough to identify the accusation, permit defense preparation, and prevent double jeopardy or vague prosecution.

§ 191. Notice of charges.

The accused shall receive clear, timely, and sufficient notice of every charge brought against him or her. Such notice shall identify the offense alleged, the statutory provision violated, the essential facts supporting the accusation, and the court before which the proceedings shall be conducted. No person shall be required to answer a criminal charge without adequate notice as prescribed by law.

§ 192. Presumption of innocence.

Every person accused of an offense under this Codex shall be presumed innocent until proven guilty by lawful conviction in a court of competent jurisdiction. The burden of proving guilt shall rest upon the prosecution, and no adverse inference shall arise solely from the fact that a person has been accused, arrested, detained, or brought to trial.

§ 193. Standard of proof.

No person shall be convicted of a criminal offense unless the prosecution establishes guilt beyond reasonable doubt. Where reasonable doubt remains concerning any essential element of the offense, the accused shall be acquitted. The court shall carefully consider all admissible evidence before rendering judgment.

§ 194. Right to counsel.

Every accused person shall have the right to obtain and be assisted by legal counsel throughout criminal proceedings. Such representation may include consultation, preparation of defenses, examination of witnesses, submission of evidence, and participation in appeals. A waiver of counsel shall be made knowingly, voluntarily, and in accordance with law.

§ 195. Public hearing.

Criminal proceedings shall ordinarily be conducted in public to ensure transparency, accountability, and public confidence in the administration of justice. A court may order a closed or restricted hearing only where necessary to protect public safety, confidential information, vulnerable persons, or other compelling interests recognized by law.

§ 196. Evidence admissibility.

Evidence shall be admitted only if it is relevant, reliable, and lawfully obtained. Evidence obtained through unlawful means may be excluded where required by law or constitutional principles. The court shall determine the admissibility, weight, and credibility of evidence in accordance with established legal standards.

§ 197. Witness testimony.

Any person possessing relevant knowledge concerning an offense may be called as a witness. Witnesses shall provide truthful testimony under oath or affirmation and may be examined concerning matters relevant to the proceedings. Knowingly providing false testimony shall constitute an offense punishable under this Codex.

§ 198. Cross-examination.

Each party shall have the opportunity to question witnesses presented by the opposing party. Cross-examination may be used to test credibility, accuracy, reliability, recollection, and consistency. The court may impose reasonable limits to prevent harassment, undue delay, repetition, or abuse of the judicial process.

§ 199. Expert evidence.

A court may admit testimony from qualified experts where specialized knowledge is necessary to assist in determining facts at issue. Expert opinions shall be based upon sufficient information, recognized principles, and reliable methods. The court shall determine the qualifications of experts and the weight to be given to their testimony.

§ 200. Verdict.

Following consideration of all evidence, arguments, and applicable law, the court shall render a verdict of guilty, not guilty, or such other lawful determination as may be authorized by statute. Every verdict shall be based upon the evidence presented and the legal standards established by this Codex.

§ 201. Sentencing authority.

Only a court possessing lawful jurisdiction may impose a criminal sentence. No punishment shall be imposed except pursuant to a valid conviction and in accordance with the penalties prescribed by law. Sentences shall be proportionate to the gravity of the offense and the circumstances of the offender.

§ 202. Sentencing factors.

In determining an appropriate sentence, the court may consider the seriousness of the offense, the degree of harm caused, the intent of the offender, prior criminal history, mitigating circumstances, aggravating circumstances, prospects for rehabilitation, and any other lawful considerations relevant to justice.

§ 203. Aggravating factors.

The court may impose a more severe sentence where aggravating circumstances are established. Such circumstances may include abuse of public office, repeated criminal conduct, participation in organized criminal activity, substantial harm to victims, obstruction of justice, or other factors specifically recognized by law.

§ 204. Mitigating factors.

The court may impose a reduced sentence where mitigating circumstances are established. Such circumstances may include cooperation with authorities, voluntary restitution, limited participation in the offense, youth, diminished capacity recognized by law, or any other factor demonstrating reduced culpability or increased prospects for rehabilitation.

§ 205. Fines.

A sentence may include the payment of monetary penalties where authorized by law. Fines shall be proportionate to the nature of the offense and the circumstances of the offender. Failure to pay a fine shall be addressed according to lawful procedures and shall not automatically result in additional punishment except as authorized by statute.

§ 206. Restitution.

A convicted person may be ordered to compensate victims for losses directly resulting from the offense. Restitution may include restoration of property, payment for damages, reimbursement of expenses, or other lawful remedies. Restitution orders shall be enforced in accordance with procedures established by law.

§ 207. Community sanctions.

Where authorized by statute, a court may impose community-based sanctions as an alternative or supplement to imprisonment. Such sanctions may include supervised service, restrictions on activities, reporting requirements, educational programs, or other lawful measures intended to promote accountability and rehabilitation.

§ 208. Imprisonment.

A court may impose a sentence of imprisonment for offenses for which incarceration is authorized. Terms of imprisonment shall be determined according to law and shall reflect the seriousness of the offense, the need for deterrence, public safety, rehabilitation, and the interests of justice.

§ 209. Life imprisonment.

Life imprisonment may be imposed for the most serious offenses designated by law. A sentence of life imprisonment shall remain in effect for the duration prescribed by statute and shall be subject only to such review, modification, or release procedures as are expressly authorized by law.

§ 210. Term of years.

A court may impose imprisonment for a specified term of years as prescribed by statute. The court shall state the duration of the sentence in its judgment. Credit for lawful detention, eligibility for review, and related matters shall be determined according to law.

§ 211. Forfeiture.

Upon conviction for an offense involving unlawful gain, unlawful property, instrumentalities of crime, or assets derived from criminal conduct, the court may order forfeiture of such property to the TREDT Union. Forfeiture may be imposed for offenses including fraud (§ 149), embezzlement (§ 150), extortion (§ 151), corruption (§ 166), bribery (§ 165), espionage

(§ 123), and such other offenses as may be prescribed by law. The court shall specify the property subject to forfeiture in its judgment.

§ 212. Disqualification.

A person convicted of a serious offense may be disqualified from holding public office, exercising certain public privileges, participating in elections, managing public funds, or occupying positions of trust. Disqualification may be imposed for offenses including treason (§ 121), sedition (§ 122), espionage (§ 123), corruption (§ 166), abuse of office (§ 167), bribery (§ 165), perjury (§ 169), and impersonation of authority (§ 174). The duration of disqualification shall be determined by law.

§ 213. Concurrent and consecutive sentences.

Where a person is convicted of multiple offenses, the court may order sentences to run concurrently or consecutively. In making such determination, the court shall consider the seriousness of the offenses, the harm caused, the offender's conduct, and the interests of justice. Offenses under §§ 121–130, §§ 131–143, and §§ 144–154 may be sentenced separately where multiple criminal acts have occurred.

§ 214. Review of sentence.

Any sentence imposed under this Codex may be reviewed by a court of competent appellate jurisdiction. The reviewing court may affirm, modify, reduce, increase where authorized by law, or set aside a sentence imposed under §§ 201–213. No sentence shall be altered except according to lawful judicial procedure.

§ 215. Capital punishment authorized.

Capital punishment may be imposed only for offenses expressly designated by Parliament as capital offenses. Such punishment may be considered for exceptionally grave offenses including treason (§ 121), aggravated espionage (§ 123), terrorism-related offenses (§ 126), murder (§ 132), and other offenses specifically designated by statute. No capital sentence shall be imposed except after conviction by a competent court.

§ 216. Authorized punishments for capital offenses.

Where a capital offense has been established under § 215, the court may impose one of the following punishments as authorized by statute:

1. Life Imprisonment;
2. Hanging;
3. Electrocution;
4. Lethal Potions; or
5. Death by Lava.

The specific punishment shall be determined according to law, the gravity of the offense, aggravating and mitigating factors, and the judgment of the court.

§ 217. Capital sentencing procedure.

Before imposing a sentence under § 216, the court shall conduct a separate sentencing proceeding. The prosecution and defense shall be permitted to present evidence concerning aggravating and mitigating circumstances. The court shall record its findings and state the reasons supporting the sentence imposed.

§ 218. Mandatory review of capital sentences.

Every sentence imposed under § 216 shall be subject to automatic review by the appropriate appellate court. No capital sentence shall become final until all mandatory reviews have been completed. The reviewing court may affirm, modify, set aside, or remand the sentence according to law.

§ 219. Stay of execution.

A competent court may issue a stay of execution where substantial legal, constitutional, evidentiary, or procedural questions remain unresolved. During the period of stay, no capital sentence shall be carried out. A stay may remain in effect until the reviewing court has rendered a final determination.

§ 220. Execution of capital judgments.

A capital judgment affirmed after all required reviews shall be executed only by lawful authority acting pursuant to statute and judicial order. The execution of such judgment shall occur in accordance with regulations enacted by Parliament and under the supervision of designated public officials. No execution may occur except upon final certification of the sentence.

§ 221. Final execution and enforcement of judgments.

Upon becoming final, judgments issued under this Codex shall be executed and enforced according to law. Such enforcement may include imprisonment under §§ 208–210, forfeiture under § 211, disqualification under § 212, restitution under § 206, fines under § 205, community sanctions under § 207, or capital punishment under §§ 215–220. All authorities of the TREDT Union shall give full force and effect to final criminal judgments lawfully rendered under this Codex.

TITLE III — UNION ELECTORAL CODEX

§ 222. Short title.

This Title may be cited as the Union Electoral Codex, abbreviated as UEC, and shall constitute the principal body of electoral law of the TREDT Union. This Codex shall govern all matters concerning elections, political parties, candidates, voting procedures, electoral administration, campaign regulation, electoral offenses, referendums, and the certification of electoral results. All elections conducted within the TREDT Union shall be subject to the provisions of this Codex.

§ 223. Constitutional authority.

This Codex is enacted pursuant to Article 93 of the Constitution of TREDT and derives its authority directly therefrom. The Constitution recognizes this Codex as the governing statutory authority for electoral matters throughout the Union. Every provision contained herein shall be interpreted consistently with the Constitution and shall possess the force and effect of law throughout the TREDT Union.

§ 224. Purpose.

The purpose of this Codex is to ensure free, fair, transparent, orderly, and lawful elections throughout the TREDT Union. The provisions of this Codex shall protect electoral integrity, guarantee equal participation, preserve public confidence in democratic institutions, and provide mechanisms for resolving electoral disputes according to law.

§ 225. Application.

The provisions of this Codex shall apply to all elections conducted under the authority of the Constitution or laws of the TREDT Union. This includes elections for the President of the Union, Parliament, State Governors, State Legislative Assemblies, State Legislative Councils, and all referendums authorized by law.

§ 226. Supremacy of the Constitution.

Nothing contained within this Codex shall be interpreted in a manner inconsistent with the Constitution of TREDT. In the event of any conflict between this Codex and the Constitution, the Constitution shall prevail and the inconsistent provision shall be invalid to the extent of the inconsistency.

§ 227. Electoral sovereignty.

The authority of government derives from the lawful expression of the electoral will of the citizens and recognized electors of the TREDT Union. Elections conducted under this Codex shall constitute the lawful means by which public authority is conferred upon elected officials.

§ 228. Universal electoral participation.

Every qualified elector recognized under the Constitution and laws of the TREDT Union shall possess the right to participate in elections conducted pursuant to this Codex. No qualified elector shall be denied participation except as authorized by law.

§ 229. Equal suffrage.

Each lawful vote cast in an election conducted under this Codex shall possess equal value and legal effect. No elector shall receive greater or lesser voting power except where expressly authorized by the Constitution.

§ 230. Secret ballot.

All voting shall be conducted by secret ballot unless otherwise authorized by law. Electoral authorities shall take all reasonable measures to ensure that the choices of electors remain confidential and protected from unlawful disclosure.

§ 231. Electoral integrity.

All elections shall be conducted honestly, transparently, impartially, and free from fraud, coercion, intimidation, corruption, or unlawful interference. Electoral authorities shall preserve the integrity of the electoral process at every stage.

§ 232. Recognition of political parties.

Political parties may be established and operated according to law. Political parties shall be recognized as lawful organizations for the purpose of participating in elections, nominating candidates, conducting campaigns, and representing political viewpoints within the Union.

§ 233. Independent candidates.

Any qualified person possessing the qualifications prescribed by law may seek election as an independent candidate without membership in a political party. Independent candidates shall enjoy equal protection and opportunity under this Codex.

§ 234. Non-discrimination.

No elector, candidate, political party, election official, or public authority shall discriminate unlawfully in the administration of elections. Electoral opportunities shall be provided equally according to law.

§ 235. Transparency.

Electoral administration shall be conducted openly and transparently. Election records, procedures, certifications, regulations, and official decisions shall be maintained and published according to law except where confidentiality is required.

§ 236. Judicial review.

Actions taken pursuant to this Codex shall be subject to review by courts of competent jurisdiction. The courts shall possess authority to interpret this Codex, remedy violations, and ensure compliance with constitutional requirements.

CHAPTER 2 — UNION ELECTION COMMISSION

§ 237. Establishment of the Union Election Commission.

There shall be established an independent electoral authority known as the Union Election Commission, hereinafter referred to as the Commission. The Commission shall administer elections, supervise electoral processes, enforce electoral laws, and perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Constitution or this Codex.

§ 238. Legal status.

The Commission shall be a permanent constitutional authority possessing legal personality and the capacity to perform all acts necessary for the fulfilment of its functions. The Commission shall operate independently of political parties, candidates, and elected officials.

§ 239. Authority of the Commission.

The Commission shall possess authority to administer elections, issue regulations, supervise electoral officials, maintain electoral records, certify results, investigate electoral violations, and exercise such additional powers as may be granted by law.

§ 240. Duty of impartiality.

The Commission and all election officials acting under its authority shall remain impartial in the performance of their duties. No election official shall favor or discriminate against any candidate, political party, or elector.

§ 241. Electoral regulations.

The Commission may issue regulations, directives, instructions, and administrative orders necessary to implement this Codex. Such regulations shall not conflict with the Constitution or Acts of Parliament.

§ 242. Election administration.

The Commission shall be responsible for planning, organizing, conducting, supervising, and certifying elections throughout the TREDT Union.

§ 243. Electoral records.

The Commission shall maintain official records of elections, candidates, political parties, certified results, electoral disputes, and such other matters as may be required by law.

§ 244. Public reporting.

The Commission shall publish official reports concerning elections conducted under this Codex. Such reports shall contain information concerning turnout, results, complaints, certifications, and matters relevant to electoral administration.

§ 245. Electoral officers.

The Commission may appoint electoral officers, administrators, inspectors, and other personnel necessary for the efficient administration of elections.

§ 246. Training of officials.

Election officials shall receive appropriate instruction and training regarding electoral procedures, legal obligations, ethics, and responsibilities established under this Codex.

§ 247. Election districts.

The Commission shall maintain records of electoral districts and administrative divisions established for electoral purposes according to law.

§ 248. Security of elections.

The Commission shall take reasonable measures to ensure the security of elections, ballots, voting systems, electoral records, and official results.

§ 249. Investigatory authority.

The Commission may investigate alleged violations of electoral law and may refer matters to competent authorities for prosecution where appropriate.

§ 250. Cooperation with public authorities.

All public authorities, agencies, and officials shall cooperate with lawful requests issued by the Commission in the exercise of its statutory functions.

§ 251. Official certification authority.

The Commission shall serve as the final administrative authority responsible for certifying election results subject to judicial review and the provisions of this Codex.

CHAPTER 3 — ELECTORS AND REGISTRATION§ 252. Qualified electors.

Every person recognized as a qualified elector under the Constitution and laws of the TREDT Union shall be entitled to participate in elections conducted pursuant to this Codex.

Qualification as an elector shall confer the right to vote in elections, referendums, and other lawful electoral processes subject to the requirements prescribed by law.

§ 253. Electoral register.

The Union Election Commission shall establish and maintain an official Electoral Register containing the names and relevant information of all qualified electors. The Electoral Register shall serve as the official record for determining eligibility to participate in elections conducted under this Codex.

§ 254. Registration requirement.

No person shall vote in an election unless duly entered upon the Electoral Register. Registration shall be conducted in accordance with procedures established by the Union Election Commission and shall constitute prima facie evidence of electoral eligibility.

§ 255. Accuracy of registration records.

The Union Election Commission shall take reasonable measures to ensure that the Electoral Register remains accurate, complete, and current. Corrections, additions, removals, and updates shall be made in accordance with law and established electoral procedures.

§ 256. Verification of eligibility.

The Commission may verify the eligibility of electors before permitting participation in an election. Verification procedures may include examination of records, confirmation of qualifications, and other lawful methods designed to preserve electoral integrity.

§ 257. Electoral identification.

The Commission may establish lawful methods of identifying electors for purposes of registration and voting. Such procedures shall be designed to prevent fraud while ensuring that qualified electors are able to exercise their electoral rights.

§ 258. Registration periods.

The Commission shall prescribe registration periods and deadlines necessary for the orderly administration of elections. Such periods shall be publicly announced and shall provide adequate opportunity for qualified electors to register.

§ 259. Correction of registration errors.

Any qualified elector who believes that registration records contain errors may apply to the Commission for correction. The Commission shall investigate such claims and make appropriate amendments where justified.

§ 260. Objections to registration.

Any lawful objection concerning the registration of an elector may be submitted to the Commission. The Commission shall investigate the matter and render a determination according to law and established procedures.

§ 261. Protection of registration records.

Electoral registration records shall be protected against unauthorized alteration, destruction, misuse, or disclosure. Any unlawful interference with registration records shall constitute an electoral offense punishable under this Codex.

§ 262. Publication of registration information.

The Commission may publish such portions of the Electoral Register as are necessary for electoral administration and public verification, provided that protected information shall remain confidential as required by law.

§ 263. Removal from the register.

An elector may be removed from the Electoral Register where eligibility ceases, where duplicate registration exists, or where removal is otherwise authorized by law. Removal shall occur only according to lawful procedures.

§ 264. Appeals concerning registration.

Any person aggrieved by a decision concerning registration may appeal to the appropriate authority or court as provided by law. Such appeals shall be heard and determined expeditiously.

§ 265. Registration for referendums.

Qualified electors entered upon the Electoral Register shall be entitled to participate in referendums conducted under the authority of the Constitution or laws of the TREDT Union unless otherwise provided by law.

§ 266. Finality of electoral register.

The Electoral Register certified by the Union Election Commission for a particular election shall constitute the official register for that election and shall remain effective unless altered by lawful authority.

CHAPTER 4 — POLITICAL PARTIES

§ 267. Recognition of political parties.

Political parties shall be recognized as lawful organizations for the purpose of participating in elections and representing political interests within the TREDT Union. Political parties shall possess such rights and responsibilities as are prescribed by law.

§ 268. Registration of political parties.

No political party shall participate in elections unless registered with the Union Election Commission. Registration shall be granted upon satisfaction of requirements prescribed by this Codex and regulations issued by the Commission.

§ 269. Application for registration.

A political party seeking registration shall submit an application containing its official name, symbol, governing documents, leadership structure, and such additional information as may be required by the Commission.

§ 270. Party constitution.

Every registered political party shall maintain a written constitution governing its internal affairs, membership, leadership, and decision-making procedures. Such constitution shall not conflict with the Constitution of TREDT or this Codex.

§ 271. Party leadership.

Political parties shall designate officers responsible for compliance with electoral laws and communications with the Commission. The names and positions of such officers shall be reported to the Commission.

§ 272. Party symbols.

The Commission may approve symbols for use by registered political parties during elections. No symbol shall be approved where it is deceptive, misleading, or substantially similar to that of another registered party.

§ 273. Internal democracy.

Political parties shall conduct their internal affairs according to democratic principles and procedures established by law and their governing documents.

§ 274. Party membership.

Political parties may establish rules governing membership, provided that such rules comply with the Constitution and laws of the TREDT Union.

§ 275. Political activities.

Registered political parties may engage in lawful political activities including campaigning, public advocacy, candidate nomination, and participation in elections.

§ 276. Financial accountability.

Political parties shall maintain records concerning finances, contributions, expenditures, and other matters required by law. Such records may be inspected by the Commission according to law.

§ 277. Annual reporting.

Political parties shall submit reports to the Commission containing information prescribed by law concerning their activities, leadership, finances, and compliance with electoral requirements.

§ 278. Suspension of registration.

The Commission may suspend the registration of a political party where serious violations of electoral law are established. Suspension shall occur only according to lawful procedures.

§ 279. Cancellation of registration.

The registration of a political party may be cancelled for substantial or repeated violations of law. Cancellation shall be subject to review and appeal according to law.

§ 280. Coalition of parties.

Registered political parties may form electoral coalitions, alliances, or joint nominations in accordance with this Codex and regulations issued by the Commission.

§ 281. Rights of registered parties.

Registered political parties shall possess the rights granted by this Codex, including the right to nominate candidates, participate in elections, campaign lawfully, and seek judicial protection of their electoral interests.

CHAPTER 5 — ELECTORAL OFFENSES AND PUNISHMENTS

§ 282. Electoral offenses generally.

Any act or omission which violates this Codex, obstructs the electoral process, interferes with the lawful exercise of electoral rights, or undermines the integrity of elections shall constitute an electoral offense punishable according to this Chapter.

§ 283. Unlawful voting.

Any person who knowingly casts a vote without lawful authority or eligibility shall commit the offense of unlawful voting and shall be subject to penalties prescribed by law.

§ 284. Multiple voting.

Any person who knowingly casts more than one vote in the same election, referendum, or electoral process shall commit the offense of multiple voting.

§ 285. False registration.

Any person who knowingly provides false information for purposes of electoral registration shall commit an offense.

§ 286. Registration fraud.

Judgments issued under this Chapter shall be enforced according to law.

§ 340. Appeals.

Persons affected by judgments under this Chapter shall possess the right to appeal.

§ 341. Finality of electoral judgments.

Electoral judgments shall become final upon exhaustion of lawful appeals.

§ 342. Effective enforcement.

All authorities of the TREDT Union shall give full force and effect to final judgments rendered under this Chapter.

TITLE IV — TREDT TRADING CODEX

CHAPTER 1 — GENERAL COMMERCIAL PROVISIONS

§ 343. Short title.

This Title may be cited as the TREDT Trading Codex, abbreviated as UTC, and shall constitute the principal body of commercial and trade law of the TREDT Union. The provisions of this Codex shall govern commerce, trade, contracts, corporations, financial transactions, mercantile practices, and all other economic activities conducted within the jurisdiction of the Union.

§ 344. Constitutional authority.

This Codex is enacted pursuant to Article 93 of the Constitution of TREDT and derives its authority therefrom. The Constitution recognizes this Codex as the governing statutory authority concerning trade and commerce throughout the TREDT Union.

§ 345. Purpose.

The purpose of this Codex is to establish certainty, fairness, efficiency, and stability in commercial transactions and economic activity. The provisions of this Codex shall promote lawful commerce, protect property rights, encourage economic development, and provide mechanisms for resolving commercial disputes.

§ 346. Scope of application.

This Codex shall apply to all persons, corporations, partnerships, associations, enterprises, public authorities, and other entities engaged in trade, commerce, finance, or economic activity within the TREDT Union.

§ 347. Commercial good faith.

Every person engaged in commercial activity shall act in good faith and according to honest commercial practices. Good faith shall be presumed unless evidence establishes otherwise.

§ 348. Freedom of trade.

Subject to the Constitution and laws of the Union, persons shall possess the freedom to engage in lawful trade, commerce, and economic activity. Restrictions upon trade shall be imposed only according to law.

§ 349. Equality in commerce.

Commercial rights and obligations established by this Codex shall apply equally to all persons and entities subject to its provisions. No person shall receive unlawful commercial preference or discrimination.

§ 350. Commercial records.

Persons and entities engaged in commerce shall maintain such records as may be required by law. Records shall be preserved in a manner sufficient to verify commercial transactions and obligations.

§ 351. Electronic commerce.

Commercial transactions conducted through electronic means shall possess the same legal validity and effect as transactions conducted through traditional written methods, unless otherwise provided by law.

§ 352. Commercial evidence.

Records, agreements, invoices, receipts, ledgers, electronic communications, and other commercial documents may be admitted as evidence according to law.

§ 353. Commercial customs.

Recognized commercial customs and mercantile usages may be considered in interpreting transactions where such customs do not conflict with statute or contract.

§ 354. Regulatory authority.

Parliament may establish regulations governing trade, commerce, corporations, financial transactions, and economic activities under this Codex.

§ 355. Judicial enforcement.

Courts possessing competent jurisdiction may enforce rights, obligations, contracts, and remedies arising under this Codex.

§ 356. Commercial remedies.

Persons injured by violations of commercial obligations may seek remedies including damages, restitution, specific performance, injunctions, and such other relief as may be authorized by law.

§ 357. Interpretation.

The provisions of this Codex shall be interpreted in a manner promoting certainty, fairness, commercial stability, economic development, and the lawful conduct of trade throughout the TREDT Union.

CHAPTER 2 — TRADE AND COMMERCE§ 358. Establishment of the TREDT Trade Administration.

There shall be established an independent statutory authority known as the TREDT Trade Administration, hereinafter referred to as the Administration. The Administration shall serve as the supreme regulatory and administrative authority responsible for the implementation and enforcement of the TREDT Trading Codex throughout the Union.

§ 359. Powers of the Administration.

The Administration shall supervise commerce, trade, corporations, financial activities, commercial registrations, mercantile practices, licenses, permits, and economic regulations established under this Codex.

§ 360. Regulatory authority.

The Administration may issue regulations, directives, orders, standards, and administrative rules necessary for the implementation of this Codex.

§ 361. Commercial registry.

The Administration shall maintain an official register of corporations, partnerships, commercial enterprises, licenses, permits, and other business entities recognized under the laws of the Union.

§ 362. Investigative authority.

The Administration may investigate suspected violations of the TREDT Trading Codex and may refer matters to prosecutorial authorities where criminal conduct is discovered.

§ 363. Commercial inspections.

Authorized officers of the Administration may conduct inspections, audits, examinations, and reviews of commercial activities as authorized by law.

§ 364. Enforcement powers.

The Administration may impose administrative sanctions, suspend licenses, revoke permits, issue compliance orders, and undertake enforcement actions authorized by this Codex.

§ 365. Advisory role.

The Administration shall advise Parliament and the President of the Union concerning commercial policy, economic regulation, trade administration, and matters arising under this Codex.

§ 366. Duty of impartiality.

The Administration shall exercise its powers impartially, lawfully, and without favor toward any person, corporation, political party, or commercial enterprise.

§ 367. Judicial review.

All final actions and decisions of the Administration shall be subject to review by courts of competent jurisdiction.

§ 368. Lawful trade.

Every person and entity subject to the jurisdiction of the TREDT Union shall have the right to engage in lawful trade and commerce. Such activities shall be conducted in accordance with this Codex, regulations issued pursuant thereto, and all other applicable laws of the Union. No trade shall be deemed lawful where prohibited by statute.

§ 369. Commercial transactions.

A commercial transaction shall include every lawful exchange, transfer, sale, purchase, lease, barter, or other arrangement involving goods, services, property, or economic value. Commercial transactions shall create rights and obligations enforceable according to law.

§ 370. Sale of goods.

Any agreement involving the transfer of ownership of goods in exchange for consideration shall constitute a sale of goods. The rights and obligations of buyers and sellers shall be governed by this Codex, applicable contracts, and established commercial principles.

§ 371. Exchange and barter.

Parties may exchange goods, services, property, or other lawful items of value without monetary payment. Such exchanges shall be recognized as valid commercial transactions and shall be subject to the same principles governing commercial agreements.

§ 372. Commercial licenses.

Parliament or competent authorities may require licenses for specified commercial activities. No person shall engage in a licensed activity without obtaining and maintaining the required authorization.

§ 373. Commercial permits.

Where required by law, permits shall be obtained before engaging in designated commercial activities. Permits may be issued, suspended, renewed, or revoked according to procedures established by law.

§ 374. Registration of commercial enterprises.

Businesses and commercial enterprises may be required to register with competent authorities before commencing operations. Registration shall create official recognition but shall not exempt any enterprise from compliance with applicable laws.

§ 375. Imports.

The importation of goods into the TREDT Union shall be conducted according to laws governing customs, duties, inspections, and commercial regulation. Imported goods may be subject to examination by competent authorities.

§ 376. Exports.

The exportation of goods from the TREDT Union shall be conducted according to applicable laws and regulations. Parliament may establish restrictions or conditions concerning specific categories of exports where necessary for public welfare or economic stability.

§ 377. Commercial inspections.

Authorized officials may conduct inspections of commercial premises, records, goods, and activities for purposes of ensuring compliance with this Codex. Inspections shall be conducted according to law and within the limits of lawful authority.

§ 378. Consumer protection.

Consumers participating in commercial transactions shall be entitled to protection against fraud, deception, misrepresentation, and unfair commercial practices. Commercial entities shall provide truthful information regarding goods and services offered for sale.

§ 379. Fair competition.

Competition among businesses shall be encouraged and protected. No person or enterprise shall engage in unlawful conduct intended to suppress fair competition, manipulate markets, or create unfair commercial advantages contrary to law.

§ 380. Monopolistic practices.

Parliament may prohibit or regulate monopolies and other market structures that substantially restrict competition or harm economic welfare. Commercial dominance alone shall not constitute a violation unless accompanied by unlawful conduct.

§ 381. Unfair trade practices.

No person shall engage in deceptive, fraudulent, misleading, coercive, or otherwise unfair trade practices. Commercial conduct found to be unfair may be prohibited and punished according to this Codex.

§ 382. Resolution of trade disputes.

Commercial disputes arising under this Chapter may be resolved through negotiation, mediation, arbitration, or judicial proceedings as provided by law. Courts shall possess authority to grant appropriate remedies where rights established by this Codex have been violated.

CHAPTER 3 — CONTRACTS AND OBLIGATIONS

§ 383. Contracts recognized.

A contract is a lawful agreement creating enforceable rights and obligations between two or more parties. Contracts entered into voluntarily and for lawful purposes shall be recognized and enforced according to this Codex.

§ 384. Capacity to contract.

Only persons and entities possessing legal capacity may enter into binding contracts. Capacity shall be determined according to law and may be subject to limitations prescribed by statute.

§ 385. Offer.

A contract may arise where one party makes a definite proposal indicating willingness to enter into a legally binding agreement upon specified terms.

§ 386. Acceptance.

Acceptance occurs when a party manifests agreement to the terms of an offer. Acceptance shall be communicated in a manner authorized by law or by the offer itself.

§ 387. Consideration.

A valid contract shall ordinarily require the exchange of value, benefit, promise, service, property, or other lawful consideration between the parties unless otherwise provided by law.

§ 388. Lawful object.

No contract shall be valid if its purpose, subject matter, or performance is unlawful or contrary to public policy established by law.

§ 389. Form of contracts.

Contracts may be oral, written, electronic, or otherwise expressed unless a specific form is required by statute. The absence of a written instrument shall not necessarily invalidate an agreement.

§ 390. Performance of obligations.

Parties shall perform contractual obligations in good faith and according to the terms of the agreement. Failure to perform without lawful excuse may constitute breach of contract.

§ 391. Breach of contract.

A party who fails to perform a contractual obligation without lawful justification shall be liable for breach of contract and may be subject to remedies provided by law.

§ 392. Damages.

A party injured by breach of contract may recover damages sufficient to place that party in the position that would have existed had the contract been properly performed, subject to limitations established by law.

§ 393. Specific performance.

Where monetary damages are inadequate, a court may order specific performance requiring a party to fulfill contractual obligations according to the terms of the agreement.

§ 394. Rescission.

A contract may be rescinded where fraud, mistake, coercion, misrepresentation, illegality, or other grounds recognized by law are established.

§ 395. Assignment of rights.

Contractual rights may be assigned to another person unless prohibited by law or by the contract itself.

§ 396. Delegation of duties.

Contractual duties may be delegated where authorized by law and the contract, provided that such delegation does not materially impair the interests of the other party.

§ 397. Interpretation of contracts.

Contracts shall be interpreted according to their language, purpose, surrounding circumstances, and the lawful intentions of the parties, with preference given to interpretations that preserve validity and enforceability.

CHAPTER 4 — CORPORATIONS AND BUSINESS ENTITIES

§ 398. Recognition of business entities.

The laws of the TREDT Union shall recognize corporations, partnerships, limited liability entities, sole proprietorships, associations, and such other business organizations as may be established by law. Such entities may possess legal rights and obligations independent of their owners, members, or officers.

§ 399. Incorporation.

A corporation may be established in accordance with procedures prescribed by law. Upon lawful incorporation, the corporation shall acquire legal personality and may exercise the powers granted by its charter, this Codex, and other applicable laws.

§ 400. Corporate existence.

A corporation shall continue to exist until dissolved according to law. The existence of a corporation shall not be affected by changes in ownership, management, or membership except as otherwise provided by law.

§ 401. Corporate powers.

A corporation may acquire property, enter contracts, conduct lawful business, sue and be sued, employ personnel, issue shares, and perform acts necessary to achieve its lawful purposes.

§ 402. Shareholders.

Shareholders shall possess such rights and obligations as are established by law, corporate charters, and governing documents. Such rights may include voting, participation in meetings, receipt of dividends, and access to certain corporate information.

§ 403. Directors.

The affairs of a corporation shall be managed or supervised by directors elected or appointed according to law and the corporation's governing documents. Directors shall exercise their powers in good faith and in the best interests of the corporation.

§ 404. Officers.

Corporations may appoint officers responsible for the administration of corporate affairs. Officers shall perform duties assigned by law, the governing documents of the corporation, or the board of directors.

§ 405. Fiduciary duties.

Directors, officers, managers, and other persons occupying positions of trust shall owe duties of loyalty, care, honesty, and good faith to the corporation and its stakeholders. Violations of such duties may give rise to liability under law.

§ 406. Partnerships.

Two or more persons may form a partnership for the purpose of conducting lawful business. Unless otherwise agreed, partners shall share rights, obligations, profits, losses, and responsibilities according to law.

§ 407. Limited liability entities.

Parliament may authorize the creation of limited liability entities in which owners possess protection from personal liability beyond their lawful contributions, except where otherwise provided by law.

§ 408. Corporate records.

Every corporation and business entity shall maintain accurate records concerning ownership, management, finances, operations, and such other matters as may be required by law.

§ 409. Mergers and consolidations.

Business entities may merge, consolidate, or reorganize according to procedures prescribed by law. Such transactions shall become effective upon compliance with all legal requirements.

§ 410. Dissolution.

A corporation or business entity may be dissolved voluntarily or involuntarily according to law. Dissolution shall not extinguish liabilities, obligations, or claims existing prior to dissolution.

§ 411. Insolvency and bankruptcy.

Where a business entity becomes unable to satisfy lawful obligations, insolvency proceedings may be initiated according to law. Such proceedings shall seek the equitable resolution of claims and obligations.

§ 412. Liquidation.

Upon dissolution or insolvency, the assets of a business entity may be liquidated according to law. The proceeds of liquidation shall be distributed in accordance with legal priorities and recognized claims.

CHAPTER 5 — FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS§ 413. Financial transactions recognized.

Financial transactions involving money, credit, debt, securities, investments, deposits, loans, transfers, and other instruments of value shall be recognized and regulated according to this Codex and applicable law.

§ 414. Lawful currency.

The lawful currency established by the TREDT Union shall be recognized for all public and private financial obligations unless otherwise authorized by law.

§ 415. Payment obligations.

Persons and entities undertaking financial obligations shall satisfy such obligations according to the terms agreed upon and the requirements of law.

§ 416. Deposits.

Financial institutions may accept deposits and hold funds on behalf of customers according to law and contractual agreements.

§ 417. Loans and credit.

Loans, credit arrangements, and financing agreements shall be governed by their terms and by applicable provisions of law. Such agreements shall create enforceable obligations between the parties.

§ 418. Interest.

Interest may be charged, paid, or collected where authorized by law and agreement. Parliament may establish limitations upon interest rates where necessary.

§ 419. Financial records.

Financial institutions and persons engaged in significant financial activities shall maintain accurate records of transactions and obligations.

§ 420. Transfer of funds.

Funds may be transferred by lawful means recognized under this Codex. Such transfers shall create rights and obligations according to law.

§ 421. Negotiable instruments.

Parliament may establish laws governing negotiable instruments, commercial paper, and similar financial instruments used in commerce.

§ 422. Securities and investments.

The issuance, purchase, sale, transfer, and ownership of securities and investments shall be governed by law and regulations enacted thereunder.

§ 423. Financial disclosure.

Persons and entities may be required by law to disclose financial information necessary for regulatory, taxation, commercial, or public purposes.

§ 424. Financial compliance.

All persons and institutions engaged in regulated financial activities shall comply with applicable laws, regulations, and lawful directives.

§ 425. Financial supervision.

Parliament may establish supervisory authorities responsible for overseeing financial institutions, markets, and transactions.

§ 426. Financial disputes.

Disputes concerning financial obligations, transactions, investments, or related matters may be resolved through courts or other lawful procedures.

§ 427. Enforcement of financial obligations.

Courts and competent authorities may enforce lawful financial obligations through judgments, orders, and remedies authorized by law.

CHAPTER 6 — MERCANTILE PRACTICES§ 428. Lawful mercantile conduct.

All merchants, traders, corporations, partnerships, and commercial enterprises shall conduct business honestly, fairly, and in accordance with this Codex. Commercial conduct shall be guided by principles of good faith, lawful dealing, and respect for contractual obligations.

§ 429. Commercial customs and usages.

Recognized commercial customs, mercantile usages, and accepted trade practices may be considered in determining the rights and obligations of parties, provided such customs do not conflict with this Codex, other laws of the Union, or the terms of a valid agreement.

§ 430. Merchant obligations.

Merchants shall exercise reasonable care, honesty, and diligence in commercial dealings. Merchants shall provide accurate information concerning goods, services, prices, and contractual obligations and shall refrain from deceptive conduct.

§ 431. Commercial representations.

No merchant or commercial enterprise shall knowingly make false, misleading, fraudulent, or deceptive representations concerning goods, services, property, business operations, or commercial transactions.

§ 432. Commercial warranties.

Express or implied warranties recognized by law may arise from commercial transactions. A merchant providing goods or services shall be bound by warranties expressly made and such warranties as are imposed by law.

§ 433. Delivery of goods.

Where a transaction requires delivery of goods, the seller shall deliver such goods according to the terms of the agreement and within the time prescribed by contract or law.

§ 434. Inspection and acceptance.

A purchaser shall possess a reasonable opportunity to inspect goods before acceptance where practicable. Acceptance of goods shall occur according to the agreement and applicable commercial principles.

§ 435. Commercial risk.

Risk associated with loss, damage, destruction, or deterioration of goods shall pass between parties according to the agreement, applicable law, and established commercial practices.

§ 436. Warehouse and storage operations.

Persons engaged in the storage, custody, transportation, or handling of goods for commercial purposes shall exercise reasonable care and shall be liable for losses resulting from negligence or unlawful conduct.

§ 437. Agency in commerce.

A person may authorize another to act as an agent in commercial matters. Acts lawfully performed by an authorized agent within the scope of authority shall bind the principal according to law.

§ 438. Commercial brokerage.

Commercial brokers, intermediaries, and agents facilitating transactions shall act honestly and shall disclose material information necessary for fair dealing.

§ 439. Transportation of goods.

Goods transported for commercial purposes shall be handled according to contractual obligations, lawful regulations, and reasonable standards of care applicable to transportation services.

§ 440. Commercial accounting.

Businesses engaged in commerce shall maintain accurate accounting records reflecting assets, liabilities, revenues, expenses, transactions, and other matters required by law.

§ 441. Commercial audits.

Parliament may authorize audits of commercial enterprises where necessary to ensure compliance with law, financial transparency, and protection of public interests.

§ 442. Resolution of mercantile disputes.

Disputes arising from mercantile practices, commercial customs, trade obligations, or business relationships may be resolved through negotiation, mediation, arbitration, or judicial proceedings according to law.

CHAPTER 7 — COMMERCIAL OFFENSES AND PENALTIES

§ 443. Commercial offenses generally.

Any act or omission that violates this Codex, unlawfully interferes with trade or commerce, damages economic integrity, or causes unlawful commercial harm shall constitute a commercial offense punishable according to this Chapter.

§ 444. Commercial fraud.

Any person who knowingly employs deception, misrepresentation, concealment, or fraudulent means to obtain commercial advantage, property, money, services, or economic benefit shall commit the offense of commercial fraud.

§ 445. False commercial statements.

Knowingly publishing or communicating false information concerning goods, services, businesses, financial conditions, or commercial transactions shall constitute a commercial offense.

§ 446. Fraudulent accounting.

Knowingly creating, altering, concealing, or falsifying accounting records, financial statements, or business records for unlawful purposes shall constitute an offense.

The creation, alteration, use, or distribution of forged commercial documents, contracts, invoices, receipts, certificates, licenses, or records shall constitute an offense.

§ 448. Misappropriation of commercial property.

Any person who unlawfully appropriates, converts, or misuses commercial property entrusted to that person's care shall commit an offense.

§ 449. Insider commercial misconduct.

A person possessing confidential commercial information who unlawfully exploits such information for personal gain or advantage shall commit an offense.

§ 450. Market manipulation.

Any scheme intended to artificially influence prices, distort market activity, interfere with fair competition, or deceive market participants shall constitute an offense.

§ 451. Monopolistic abuse.

A person or entity possessing substantial market power who unlawfully exploits such power to suppress competition or cause commercial harm shall commit an offense.

§ 452. Unfair trade practices.

Any person who engages in deceptive, coercive, fraudulent, or substantially unfair trade practices shall commit an offense.

§ 453. Commercial bribery.

Offering, giving, soliciting, or accepting unlawful benefits in connection with commercial activities, contracts, transactions, or business decisions shall constitute an offense.

§ 454. Commercial corruption.

Any person who abuses a position of trust or authority within commercial activities for unlawful gain shall commit an offense.

§ 455. Violation of licensing requirements.

Knowingly conducting a commercial activity requiring a license without obtaining or maintaining such license shall constitute an offense.

§ 456. Violation of permit requirements.

Knowingly conducting activities requiring permits without lawful authorization shall constitute an offense.

§ 457. Obstruction of commercial inspections.

Any person who unlawfully obstructs, interferes with, or refuses lawful commercial inspections authorized under this Codex shall commit an offense.

§ 458. Destruction of commercial records.

Knowingly destroying, concealing, altering, or falsifying commercial records required by law shall constitute an offense.

§ 459. False regulatory filings.

Submitting false information to commercial regulators, authorities, or public institutions shall constitute an offense.

§ 460. Commercial conspiracy.

Any agreement between two or more persons to commit a commercial offense shall constitute the offense of commercial conspiracy.

§ 461. Attempted commercial offenses.

Any person who attempts to commit a commercial offense and takes substantial steps toward its commission shall be liable according to law.

§ 462. Aiding and abetting commercial offenses.

Any person who knowingly assists, facilitates, encourages, or supports the commission of a commercial offense shall be liable as a participant in the offense.

§ 463. Corporate liability.

Corporations, partnerships, and other business entities may be held liable for commercial offenses committed by officers, directors, employees, agents, or representatives acting within the scope of their authority.

§ 464. Liability of directors and officers.

Directors, officers, managers, and executives responsible for unlawful commercial conduct may be personally liable according to law.

§ 465. Commercial investigations.

Competent authorities may investigate alleged violations of this Codex and may gather evidence according to law.

§ 466. Administrative sanctions.

Commercial offenders may be subject to warnings, suspensions, revocations of licenses, administrative penalties, or other sanctions authorized by law.

§ 467. Monetary penalties.

Courts may impose monetary penalties proportionate to the seriousness of the offense, the harm caused, and the benefits unlawfully obtained.

§ 468. Restitution.

Commercial offenders may be ordered to compensate injured persons, businesses, consumers, or public authorities for losses resulting from unlawful conduct.

§ 469. Disqualification from commerce.

Persons convicted of serious commercial offenses may be prohibited from engaging in specified commercial activities for a period prescribed by law.

§ 470. Dissolution of unlawful enterprises.

Courts may order the dissolution, liquidation, or termination of enterprises established or operated primarily for unlawful purposes.

§ 471. Appeals.

Persons and entities affected by judgments under this Chapter shall possess the right to appeal according to law.

§ 472. Enforcement of judgments.

Judgments rendered under this Chapter shall be enforced according to law by courts and competent authorities of the TREDT Union.

§ 473. Finality of commercial judgments.

Commercial judgments shall become final upon exhaustion of lawful appeals. All authorities of the TREDT Union shall give full force and effect to final judgments rendered under this Codex.
